Editorial:

Member Eckehart Blume has responded to our request for more information concerning Leonard Baumgartner. Leonard was born in 1888 and died in 1971. He was a teacher, painter and a sculptor. He was first trained in an arts and crafts school in Munich. Later he attended a Technical University. He then became a teacher of aesthetic education in Rosenheim until 1953. As far as anyone knows the set of Poster Stamps that appeared in the July 2010 Bulletin was his only contribution to our hobby.

SOME WORDS OF WISDOM FROM CHARLES KIDDLE

POSTER STAMP PRICES

Well known throughout the English speaking world is the saying 'He knows the cost of everything but the value of nothing'. For us as poster stamp collectors, 'value' is more important than 'cost'. All of us, in our collections, have poster stamps we 'value'. 'Value' not in monetary terms but for what it or they mean to us. For example : the image / design may be 'fantastic', the poster stamp brings back memories, or, perhaps, we had been searching for it 'for years' and found it in a dealer's stock book for $1.

Collectors, to a greater or lesser extent, are informed by catalogs. The best example is postage stamp collecting where catalogs have been printed for about 150 years (Stanley Gibbons, London, in 1864). These catalogs inform and define the market. Stamp collectors are well aware that postage stamps can be bought for a 'percentage of catalog prices' and that rarities, especially great rarities, may be bought (in auction) for, perhaps, many times the catalog 'price'. As with many aspects, 'supply and demand' determines price. 'As with all collectables, prices can increase or decrease over time, determined by 'fashion'.

So, how does the above apply to poster stamps? Perhaps the first point to make is that 99.99% of postage stamps are known (to collectors generally using catalogs). There are 100,000s of stamp collectors but ('serious') poster stamp collectors may be 0.01% of that total or even less. Postage stamp collectors, world wide, happily buy catalogs, often every new edition. World wide, at a guess, less than 50 poster stamp collectors are interested in catalogs or definitive books about poster stamps. Why? Is it that they are not interested in knowing what exists or, perhaps, they are not be prepared to spend a few $s on a book? In fairness, no doubt a reason is that many collectors do not know such catalogs / books exist.

'Supply and demand'. 90+% of postage stamps, if the collector has the money all can be bought very quickly, especially using the Internet. With poster stamps, the opposite is the case. Whatever money was offered, a significant percentage of poster stamps cannot be found and purchased. Experience shows that prior to 1940 at least 500,000 different poster stamps were printed world wide. 90% are 'common'. As an example, during the Communist era in Hungary, Pal Rampacher was able to leave the country with his collection after 'giving' the Head Post Master 10,000,000 poster stamps (the zeros are correct). But, 99.9% were standard exhibition poster stamps with up to 10,000 of any one poster stamp. The Internet has not helped the collector to obtain 'rare' poster stamps but it has raised awareness and provided opportunities to buy poster stamps. A 'plus' is that now poster stamps are less likely to be considered 'worthless' and will be offered rather than thrown away as 'waste paper'. A down side is that some poster stamps are now 'common' which before the Internet were considered great rarities. Two specific examples are the Loffler 'Angel' and the Egon Schiele self portrait. Now, with supply exceeding demand, both can be obtained for less than 10% of their pre Internet prices.

'Rarity': 'rarity' is very much tied up with 'supply and demand' but, also, awareness. Lotte Maier's book 'Die bibliophilen Taschenbücher' is as well known as any other poster stamp publication. Five poster stamps – detailed here as 'fig 1.' (H Busch artist), 'fig 2.' (artist Atelier Lehmann-Steglitz), fig 3.' (artist Theo Matejko), fig 4.' (artist Otto Ottler) and 'fig 5.' (artist Laszlo) are great rarities. 99.99% of collectors, even if they wished to obtain them, would never have them in their collection. Two other 'rarities' not in the Lotte Maier's book are illustrated 'fig 6.' (artist Oscar Petersen) and 'fig 7.' (artist Tem Hompel). Finally, 'fig 8.' which is Maxfield Parish's iconic 'Crane's Chocolates'. Of the last, 3 or 4 copies are known and, currently, one can be bought for 'only' some $4,500! Two final thoughts on 'rarity' and 'price'. In 20 years of seeing, perhaps, 30,000,000 poster stamps world wide, including Museum collections, only one copy of at least 5,000+ poster stamps have been seen. Are each 'worth' $4,500 or more? Again, 20 years experience shows that there remain 10,000s of poster stamps which are 'unknown' ('unknown' to more than one person outside the 'circle' of informed collectors) or have yet to be seen. As each year goes by, many in the latter group are discovered.

Finally, perhaps, the most important aspect. All of us should collect what we like. None of us should collect because someone tells us what to collect or because a particular poster stamp is a 'trophy'.

IS THIS A RARITY? #1

Until proven otherwise we say, "Yes it is". This vignette was copyrighted in 1909 in Philadelphia. There is a cute little red truck with a driver who appears to be steering the vehicle while sitting in the middle of the front seat. At the top there is a "Postscript amp" trade mark. The message "If wishes were horses, beggars would use autos" updates an old idea. Has anyone ever come upon other issues with a "Postscript amp" trade mark? If so, we would like to know about them.

IS THIS A RARITY? #II

A dapper young man (upper left) dressed in a white suit and a classy white hat appears to be ordering flowers. A lady elegantly dressed in 19th century style receives flowers (lower right). "Send Her A Flowergram" is the message. We doubt that one would find this issue in very many albums. If this is true, then we have found a rarity. Of course, we could be wrong and this issues could be as common as dirt. What do you think?

A "FREEBEE" FROM THE DRUG STORE

The following vignettes we think are unusual because of the attachment at the bottom of each vignette. These issues were printed by the WENTZ Company in New York. The advertising design kills two birds with one stone. First each vignette advertises a dubious drug store product and second, it encourages people, young and old, to collect art stamps. As the editor of the Poster Stamp Bulletin, we embrace this concept.

REMEMBERING MANFRED

Manfred Zöllckhofer has joined that rare but important group of Poster Stamp catalog makers who have embraced two topics in our hobby with intelligence and clarity. Why he decided to study beer and tobacco vignettes is unknown. We are all grateful that he did. His beer and tobacco catalogs are definitive and important contributions to our hobby. We will miss him.

Some samples of beer vignettesSome examples of tobacco vignettesTHE VERY RARE (RR), RARE (R) AND SCARCE (S) AUCTION

This is definitely a "Good Stuff" auction. Because it is so good the vendor has suggested estimated values. RR=$20 to $50, R=$10 to $20, S=$5 to $10. It doesn't get much better than this, folks. The first responder will receive tie bids. The ten day return policy is in effect. The auction ends on the last day of the month. Much of this material will not be coming your way soon again. So we hope you will enjoy this "good stuff" offering whether you bid or not.
